“ Hey pops. Tomorrow is your birthday and I am thinking of you like crazy. I am still struggling with the loss of you. I miss you terribly. I wish that I could just see you smile again and hear your laugh. I hope that you visit me in my dreams or come along the hike with me again like you did last weekend. That was special and I will never forget it. Talk to you soon pops. We love you.

“ Missing pops everyday. Whenever I was sad, stressed or just needed someone to talk to about any situation, dad was always there. He always made me feel better. Making funny comments or giving sugerstions. I never really needed to worry about anything with him. I remember the time that I wanted to attend a school dance I was afraid to ask because I knew we couldnt afford it but somehow someway dad came through. I was able to buy a dress, shoes and get a haircut. It was one of the best nights.

When I used to go to Springstown middle school, him and I would go to royal jelly donuts and get a few donuts with milk and coffee before school. MmmMmm good. Even on Saturdays but it was a dozen. He made himself a pot of coffee with extra sugar and cream and I sat right next to him on the couch with my milk and we start dunking away while watching Bill Dance Fishing or Bull riding. Good memories.

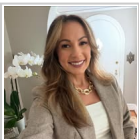

In high school my junior year, one of my classes required us to make a memory book. My memory book was dedicated to my dad. It told stories about our fishing trips, our dancing and all the other little things he used to do for me. I got an A on that project and dad was so blown away the book brought tears to his eyes. Just 2 weekends ago when I went to visit him, he mentioned that book.

Dad was an awesome man. Loved by all the lives that crossed his path. He made his mark on each and every one of them.

Dad, you will be missed. I hope you visit me in my dreams soon. All our memories will be cherished and told over and over again.

Love you
